

There is not much to say here other than I personally do not want any unsolicited phone calls from anyone, period. Especially not any phone solicitations that will be selling anything. I do not care that I have business dealings with certain banks, etc. The only time I believe they should call is if it concerns the business that we already have established.

I certainly do not appreciate them calling to sell something I have not requested information on. This would invade my right to privacy (that being whatever I happen to be enjoying at the time).

This is why I signed up for the NO-CALL in the first place. If they have something to sell, they have the option of MAIL and I have the option of throwing it away or calling them. I do not have to listen to the run-on, never take no for an answer and end up hanging up disturbing my evening event. To be fair, if you open this up, you should in turn require that when I call them that I must reach a live person (preferably the President of the company and that they should be available to take my calls. I really thought the public had spoken clearly on this matter. We do not want any unsolicited phone calls selling anything invading our time. Thanks for your consideration on this matter.

Aaron Johnson